

NUSBAUM-BUCKINGHAM HOUSE

178 EAST GREEN STREET

It is often remarked that the early builders of homes in Westminster were basically an agriculturally minded people, and seemed to look more to the soil than they thought of themselves as living in a City. This is certainly true here at 178 East Green Street, one of the earliest homes to be built on land subdivided by John C. Frizzell in the middle of that century. In fact, it, and neighboring 180 East Green Street, are the only houses shown on the subdivision plat (except for the Frizzell's house, "The Winchester place"). Number 178, probably built for rental income purposes, is a fine example of local building style in the middle of the 19th century; it has the requisite dimensions, a pleasant simply-decorated front porch, and a two tier side porch.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Number 178 East Green Street is situated on the southeast corner of that street's intersection with Center Street in Westminster. The white clapboard L-shaped house sits on low coursed fieldstone foundations.

The house consists of two approximately equal two-story three-bay-by-two-bay sections. The principal facade, fronting East Green Street, is set back about 10' from the street. The first floor is shaded by a broad hipped-roof tin-covered porch which is supported by six turned posts with carved wood decorations where brackets might be expected to be. The decoration, in its radiating shape, gives the appearance of spider webs. The entrance door is somewhat off center, but is the central ground story bay. It seems to be original, and is a many-panelled wood door. The other five bays of the facade are all vertically and horizontally aligned, and consist of glass and aluminum storm windows simply enframed between black louvered shutters. A flat-capped chimney rises at the roofs peak, perpendicular with the street and with the peak, roughly halfway down the roof's edge; the resultant fireplaces and room divisions may be the cause for the facade's being off-center. The west facade, running parallel with Center Street, has two regularly placed 2/2 windows on both floors and in both sections, resulting in rows of four windows per floor. Windows, with their black shutters and simple enframement, are similar to those on the principal facade. The same simple wooden cornice found on the principal facade is continued along this wall. The south facade contains one 2/2 window (centrally placed below the gable) per floor. The slight elongation of the east roof as seen from the south correctly indicates the present of a side porch shading the opened L side of the rear section.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

It is often remarked that the early builders of homes in Westminster were basically agriculturally minded people, and seemed to look more to the soil than they thought of themselves as living in a City. This is certainly true here at 178 East Green Street, one of the earliest homes to be built on land subdivided by John C. Frizzell in the middle of that century. In fact, it, and neighboring 180 East Green Street, are the only houses shown on the subdivision plat (except for the Frizzells house, "the Winchester place"). Number 178, probably built for rental income purposes, is a fine example of local building style in the middle of the 19th century; it has the requisite dimensions, a pleasant simply-decorated front porch, and a two tier side porch.

On December 30, 1875 Frizzell sold the lot of "Timber Ridge Resurveyed" (the tract that he was in the process of subdividing) to Margaret Nusbaum for $525 (Carroll County Deed Book 46, Page 74). Mrs. Nusbaum must have worked quickly, as the L shaped house is shown clearly on the next year's plat of the City. Nevertheless, she must have intended the house for money not residence, as the 1881 City Directory lists one A.W. Buckingham as living at 178. In any event, on February 18, 1890, Charles T. Reifsnider, her executor, sold the place for $1,000 to William Hilton (70/519). Hilton sold the place, at a loss, to Alfred W. Buckingham (who must have been living in the house for at least 10 years) for $862.50 (80/484). The house stayed the property of various members of the Buckingham family through several deeds (137/60, 137/68, 179/69, 179/71) until August 19, 1974 when it was sold to the Carroll County Development Corp. (577/158), and was then sold to the present owner on August 23, 1976.
